About the Conference

More and more young people are using heroin these days, and sometimes they start using it because they've gotten addicted to prescription painkillers. Regulations designed to make it more difficult to abuse prescription painkillers are leading to an increase in heroin addiction. Heroin addiction is associated with loss of productivity, higher healthcare expenditures, and increased costs associated with crime. Heroin addiction is a costly and dangerous condition afflicting the State of Georgia.

While pain medication use has fallen off significantly, another pain medication called fentanyl is being used with heroin with deadly results

This workshop will review the journey from prescription pain medication to the current heroin epidemic and promising treatment and recovery strategies.
